U.S. Navy Seabees

The Seabees, servicemen who served in the US Navy's Construction Battalions, have continued to be instrumental in creating infrastructure—including roads, bridges, and military bases—for the American military since their creation during World War II.

Many of the Seabees in our region still enjoy using and maintaining the skills they honed while serving in the military. Their love of camaraderie and teamwork is evident as they assemble regularly to undertake volunteer projects that employ the skills and knowledge they acquired during their years of service working with civil engineering projects in the Navy.

Please join us at our Fall Kickoff Dinner to hear their stories and learn how they apply their experiences to their civilian lives.
